In fact, Windows 10 is a vast improvement on Windows 7 and Windows 8 in many ways, but it's not without problems. The biggest problem with Windows 10 is that you have to pay Microsoft for the privilege of upgrading to the latest version of Windows. Windows 10 is currently only available as a free upgrade for Windows 7 and Windows 8 users who have purchased a qualifying PC between October 14th 2015 and January 29th 2016. If you don't qualify for the free upgrade to Windows 10, you can pay around $120 to upgrade to the newest Windows 10 version that's called Windows 10 Pro. Microsoft has also released a Windows 10 version called Windows 10 Home which is designed specifically for low-end devices, such as laptops, tablets and small gaming devices. Windows 10 Home does not come with any extra features or benefits and you can't buy it at any time. Windows 10 Home is only available as a free upgrade for Windows 7 and Windows 8 users who have purchased a qualifying PC between July 29th 2015 and January 29th 2016. Keep in mind that the free upgrades are available to users who meet the specifications listed above. If you have a PC that is not included in the Windows 10 list, you can still upgrade to Windows 10, but you'll have to pay for it and we strongly advise that you opt for Windows 10 Home instead. As of April 2016, all major PC manufacturers have already added Windows 10 to their list of Windows OS installation options. This means that if you purchase a laptop, PC or tablet within the next few months, you'll have the option to upgrade your device to Windows 10. By default, Windows 10 will start by displaying an 'Update your PC' screen to tell you that your device is set up for an upgrade and that you should allow it to install the new version. Once the upgrade process has been completed, you'll be able to begin using Windows 10 right away. In order to install Windows 10, you'll have to have the Internet connected to the device you're using. You can use Wi-Fi to connect to your home network or connect to a cellular data connection when you're outside your home. You'll also have to have at least 50% of the device's free storage space left in order to install Windows 10, and you'll be able to use up to 20 GB of free space during the installation process.
