However, FIFA players are divided over how to use this data, and it is suspected that data from the professional team in NFL 2K5 has been copied wholesale. EA Sports were quick to claim they do not use NFL 2K5 data, while the developers of NFL 2K5 have since gone on the record to state that their data has only been made available to US television broadcasters, and there is no record of that data being used by any third party. FIFA is, in our opinion, the superior game, but there is no doubt that NFL 2K5 has some very potent football engines, and as you can see by the video below, they have been packed full of all sorts of interesting technical touches. The feet, and hence the ball, detect contact with a player and know who is touching whom, how hard they are striking the player, and how firm or soft the hit is – as well as the angle at which the player is striking the player. We decided to see what the best formations are, who’s the best players and where the top nations lie in FIFA and NFL 2K5’s Best XI. What are the best formations in FIFA? Reasons to start formations: They set up the game to a certain style of play (play like Manchester United, play like Bayern Munich, etc) They make the game easier (a 4-4-2 can be almost impossible to play when you don’t have the ball) Match difficulty Off-ball movement in a formation changes the ball flight, based on how the player starts (starting forward, then mid-field, then wide) and how he releases (first touch, dribble, shoot) Foul issues are different with certain formations, you can foul based on where the ball is and who is being fouled – so you know you need to mark the tricky player, or the fool who keeps drifting into you, and you have a better chance to win the freekick. The old adage of “If it ain’t broke don’t fix it” is never more apt than with FIFA! To stop anyone complaining about the formations, we’ve picked the best four, and the worst two, and the five best plus worst to play with (that is, the best “broken” version). Team instructions are instructions which the players are given to control the
